Thailand is a country of cultural diversity. There are many nations and tribes especially in Chiang Mai which is known by City of Cultures. People in each tribe also live differently. More than 40 tribes have settled in Thailand which are La-ear, Hmong, Karen etc. One of the most populated tribes in Thailand is the Hmong. Mostly they live with nature, whether in the middle or the top of the mountain. Every family there do farming for living. The village is quite and far away from the city. Traveling from the village to the city will take more than 4 hours, so it is not very convenient to go in the city center. Normally, the government provides school for each village, but it is only elementary school. Therefore, in order to continue studying children need to leave the village and study the secondary or higher level in the city. By living in the city children need to have shelter because they don't have family there.

Fortunately, there is Bethany Home Foundation which located in Tha Wang Tan Subdistrict, Saraphi District, Chiang Mai Province. Bethany Home Foundation is the foundation for children and Youth which is one of the projects under the Eerland King Foundation founded by German missionaries. Its purpose is to help and provide educational opportunities of underdeveloped children whose parents had passed away or gone to prison, so children from many regions have the opportunity to go to school.

Having children in the care of an organization has both advantages and disadvantages. One of the disadvantages is that children do not have freedom. They are limited in space and cannot go out freely. As a result, children have difficulty adjusting or socializing when they are going to larger racial or social diversity. Therefore, we set up this project to lay the groundwork and build a strong understanding among children about cultural diversity so that they can live in diverse societies smartly and happily.
